Atkins endows director of athletics position

In a history-making gesture of generosity, Robby Atkins '65 has endowed the director of athletics position at Wofford College. The $3 million investment creates the first endowed fund to support a coaching or staff position at the college.

This places Wofford among the 12% of Division I Football Bowl Subdivision institutions to have an endowed director of athletics position. Scott Kull, Wofford's new director of athletics, is first to hold the Robert D. Atkins '65 Director of Athletics position.

"What a gift! To step onto campus for my first official day of work as director of athletics and be able to thank Robby Atkins for this remarkable contribution is the stuff of legend," says Kull. "I'll work every day to live up to the honor and responsibility of this new endowed position."

Tomkins' TED-Ed lesson illuminates ancient Egypt

Dr. Jessica Tomkins, assistant professor of history, created a TED-Ed video exploring the legacy of Pharaoh Ramesses II.

Dr. Jessica Tomkins' TED-Ed video has captivated more than 370,000 viewers (and counting) on YouTube.

In the video, Tomkins, assistant professor of history, explores whether the controversial Pharaoh Ramesses II was a model leader or a master of propaganda in a courtroom drama.

"I've always used these short little videos in my classes," says Tomkins, an Egyptologist who specializes in the Old Kingdom, also known as the Pyramid Age. "Compared with other online sources, TED-Ed tends to produce videos with correct information. So, one day I came across an email address on their website for somebody to get in touch with if you have ideas and decided to submit my own idea."

Students spark Wofford Women's Health Coalition

Three Wofford College students are leading women's health outreach on campus and in the surrounding community.

Madelyn Wilson '25, Gabby Gecan '25 and Mary Charles Burke '25 have founded the Wofford Women's Health Coalition with the aim of combining education and awareness on women's health topics with monthly service opportunities in Spartanburg, South Carolina.

"We needed a space where we can talk about women's health, benefit the community and promote education," says Wilson, a psychology and Spanish major from Apex, North Carolina, who is serving as the coalition's co-president.

Shared Worlds establishes endowed fund to support financial aid for campers

The next installment of Shared Worlds, a science fiction/fantasy teen writing summer camp, will be held at Wofford July 14-27.

A new endowed fund aims to provide aspiring teen writers with monetary support that will enable them to hone their skills at Wofford College.

In December, Shared Worlds, a science fiction/fantasy teen writing summer camp, gave $75,000 to establish the endowed fund. Proceeds from the fund will be used to provide financial aid to campers annually beginning in 2025. The cost of the camp is currently about $2,600 per participant.

“Our goal is to ensure that everyone who wants to participate in Shared Worlds, can,” says Dr. Joseph Spivey, associate professor of mathematics and the camp’s director. “This fund also gives Shared Worlds alumnae and other friends a way to pay it forward.”
