Alumnae Visit Senior Seminar by Dr. Peter Brewitt

Professor Lane took ENVS101 students to the Pacolet Heritage Preserve, which has become a traditional field trip for the class.

On Thursday three distinguished Wofford ENVS alumnae returned to the nest to share their wisdom and perspectives with this year's seniors. Lauren Senn '12 (a Clemson PhD student), Andrea McCracken '13 (just accepted a job at AECOM) and Alex Hoots '17 (sustainability intern at CU-Boulder) joined us at Glendale for an enjoyable and wide-ranging conversation. Their advice (for those who weren't there) balanced sharp suggestions with a wise sense of balance and flexibility. Our seniors are going places – grad school, internships, the professional world – and it was fun, and inspiring for me, to see visions of their futures in our visitors. I look forward to seeing some of these seniors come back from their adventures to share ideas with the class of 2021. I gave them some space to talk without me present, so I cannot speak for ALL the advice they received, but I agreed with pretty much everything I heard. At the end we congregated at senior Riley Garrison's Poet's Garden, enjoying the landscape as the sun sank low, on the Lawson's Fork and on the college careers of the class of 2018.

Villanova University – MS in Environmental Science

Villanova's Master of Science in Environmental Science (MSES) program focuses on understanding the scientific processes of the environment to better manage human interactions with natural systems. Students can learn relevant technology skills such as geographic information systems, global positioning systems, cartographic techniques, and satellite imagery.

The MSES degree, with either a thesis or non-thesis option, offers a foundation in current environmental issues and research methods along with hands-on research experience and concentrations in Ecosystem Sciences and Resource Management.

Villanova's geographic location in the mid-Atlantic offers coastal to urban to agricultural environments for research study and faculty have a wide range of academic disciplines.
